YOUNG REPORTER TELLS HER OWN STORY

Hilde Lysiak's father was a reporter for the New York Daily News. When she was young, he often took her to work, and she developed a strong interest in news stories and reporting. When she was 8, Hilde started her own newspaper, called the Orange Street News (OSN) after the street where she lived. Hilde did the writing, her sister Izzy took pictures, and her father helped her organize and print the newspaper.

Hilde wanted to cover stories important to everyone in her town. She got into a habit of going on her bike and looking for news stories. Following the rules her father had taught her, she researched and reported stories in her monthly newspaper. She also started reporting on her own website and on YouTube.

OSN suddenly became famous when a murder happened in town, and 9-year-old Hilde was the first person to report it. Soon, news organizations around the country were doing stories on Hilde.

Not everyone was happy about Hilde's efforts. Some people criticized her parents for allowing her to report on something as unpleasant as a murder. Others criticized Hilde for "pretending to be a reporter". Some people even suggested she should be playing with dolls. Hilde was upset by the complaints. She responded with a YouTube video. "I never began my newspaper so that people would think I was cute," she said. "I want to be taken seriously. I'm sure other kids do, too." That wasn't the last time Hilde had trouble getting people to take her seriously. Sometimes, it was because of her age. Other times, it was because she was a girl. But she never let that stop her.

In 2019, she made the news again when a police officer threatened to arrest her for filming him. Hilde knew her rights as a reporter were protected under the Constitution. Later, the town apologized to Hilde for the officer's actions.

Hilde's activities as a reporter have made her famous, and she has earned several awards. With her father, she has written a series of books for young people, called "Hilde Cracks the Case". The books are based loosely on stories that Hilde wrote. The books have now been turned into a TV show called "Home Before Dark". In April, "Hilde on the Record" came out. In this book, Hilde tells her own story, both the good parts and the sad parts. She talks honestly about the difficulties she has run into. Some of them came from other people, others came from Hilde herself, trying to figure out who she was as she grew older.

For now, Hilde says she has given up reporting. But she's still just 15, and has plenty of time to decide what she wants to do with her life. Her efforts have already inspired people around the world.

WORKING WITH FLUFF-BALLS

Meet Huang Shunjie. He might have one of the best jobs in the world. The 24-year-old is a panda photographer and zookeeper. Huang spends each day caring for 18 panda cubs at the Giant Panda Protection and Research Centre, in China. He prepares their meals of bamboo and formula milk, and checks on their growth and health.

The best part? "I can get very close to the baby pandas, which makes many people jealous, as I get to hug them all the time." There are, of course, bad parts to any job. In Huang's case, it is the regular bites and scratches he gets from the 45- to 55-pound bears. 2.1. _____ They tumble around, balance on their heads, and bop around like furry toddlers. "I'm a full-time daddy for these fluffy baby pandas," says Huang.

Two of the pandas Huang cares for are known worldwide. He-He and Mei-Mei celebrated their first birthday on July 25. They are the only twin pandas born from a wild father and captive mother. 2.2. _____ It is very important, as pandas were among the world's most endangered creatures until recently. But their populations have recovered in recent years, thanks to programs which help pandas breed.

As the number of pandas goes up, China is able to send more of them overseas. 2.3. _____ It began in the seventh century, when China sent a pair of pandas to Emperor Tenmu, of Japan. Today, more than 50 pandas live in 18 countries. China usually sends pandas to other countries for 10 years. 2.4. _____ Any offspring remain China's property. The loans often take place along with international trade deals that China is involved in.

Huang does not think about money or politics, though. He thinks about the fact that the pandas he cares for end up bringing joy to millions of adults and children around the globe. "I'm really proud of that," he says.

‘OK’

Of all the words in the English language, the word “OK” is pretty new. According to the Oxford English Dictionary it's only 5.1. _____ used for about 180 years.

5.2. _____ it has become the most spoken word on the planet, it is kind of a strange word. Sometimes it is spelt “okay” and sometimes just two 5.3. _____ are used: “OK.” Other times, full stops separate 5.4. _____: “O.K.”

So why 5.5. _____ people start to say “OK”? Linguists aren't entirely 5.6. _____. Some of them point to how, in the early 19th century, humorous abbreviations were in fashion. Young people would write things like “KG,” which stood 5.7. _____ “know go,” an intentional misspelling of “no go,” when they meant something was impossible. It was a way to play 5.8. _____ language.

Experts think “OK” became an abbreviation of “oll korrekt” – 5.9. _____ was a funny way of saying “all correct.” Others say that it comes from “Old Kinderhook”, a nickname for former U.S. President Martin Van Buren, or from Choctaw, a Native American language.

One last important thing to know: 5.10. _____ you like to play Scrabble, it is all right – and even OK – to use “OK” when playing. Just within the past year, it became an accepted word.
