SWEDEN'S ICE MUSIC ORCHESTRA PLAYS THE COOLEST MUSIC ON EARTH

Each winter, a unique orchestra in Luleå, Sweden, performs a series of concerts on the most delicate instruments in the world. How delicate? If you breathe on them, they will melt. In fact, they melt into water each spring.

But come winter, the Ice Music orchestra plays instruments made of ice in a concert hall in Lapland, the northernmost part of Sweden. The concert hall, which accommodates up to 200 guests, is built by two spherical igloos connected together in the middle. The stage in the middle has the lowest air temperature. Body heat and breath from the audience are vented to the igloos' ventilation holes in the roof, like chimneys. This provides the best conditions and a constant temperature of – 5 ° C, which is most ideal for the instruments.

The instruments are not 100% ice. The stringed instruments have strings and a few wood or metal elements, as normal instruments do. But the large parts that would be wood on regular instruments are made of ice. The wind instruments have not been created yet, as they would melt from the inside out as soon as a musician breathed into them. But there are stringed instruments of all kinds and plenty of percussion, including huge spherical drums and a xylophone that looks like a set of giant ice cubes.

During shows, heatless LED lights inside all the instruments keep changing colours. The concert hall looks like “a nightclub in heaven,” according to Tim Linhart, who makes all the instruments every year in a six-week frenzy of productivity. They are so delicate that they get re-tuned between songs because being played and breathed on can cause slight melting. And if a repair is necessary, Linhart says he can just add a little water to patch up any holes.

The sound is very clear and crisp, because unlike wood, ice absorbs no vibrations. You might think this icy orchestra would play only classical music, but in fact, they perform rock (using six and 12-string ice guitars), country (with an ice banjo), and jazz.

If you go, take plenty of clothes. Members of the audience are advised to wear multiple layers to stay warm at these cool concerts.

VOLUNTEERING

Volunteering is an opportunity to change lives, including your own. So how do you go about it?

1. _____

Unlike school; with volunteering you get to pick what really interests you and who (or what) is most deserving of your time. If you have more than one thing you love, find a way to combine the two. For example, if you love kids and are great at arts and crafts, visit your local children's hospital and offer to run art activities for young patients.

2. _____

Once you have identified something that inspires you, decide how much time you want to spend on it. Usually volunteers give local organisations a set amount of time every week. But what if school, sport, or other commitments prevent you from devoting time regularly? Some organisations have day-long activities or weekly, monthly or even structured internships for the entire summer.

3. _____

Volunteering is a great way to learn new skills – from working as part of a team to setting and reaching goals. It gives you the chance to discover what kinds of things you are best at and enjoy the most. A volunteer job can help you develop a new understanding of people who are different from you – people with disabilities, people in financial distress, sick kids, or the elderly.

4. _____

Donating your time is a great way to see that you have the power to change things for the better and it can be a source of great contentment. Additionally, it allows you to get a perspective on your own life. Sometimes it is easy to get consumed by worries about your marks or the fight you had with your friend or parent. Although these things are very important in their own way, sometimes it can be helpful to get some perspective. Volunteering does this by letting you focus on others and see that your involvement in the world can be meaningful.

5. _____

When you dedicate your time to a cause you care about, it looks good on college or job applications. This is not the main reason for volunteering, of course — if you do it just to please other people you may not enjoy it. However volunteering does show others that you are reliable enough to make a commitment and show up on time. Volunteering also shows employers and colleges that you are willing to sacrifice your time and energy to make the world a better place.

6. _____

After you have decided what you are interested in and how much time you can devote to it, it is time to find out where you can volunteer. You have several choices, such as searching the Internet, calling an organisation in your area directly, asking friends or relatives for ideas and contacts or looking on local bulletin boards. Most places will ask you to come for an interview, which is usually pretty casual. They want to talk to you face to face. If it is a good fit – meaning you like the organisation, they like you and you like the work — volunteering can be an incredible experience.
